Survey tries to predict results of mock election

By Mike Merry and Sara Hughes

You've heard the call to vote before, and now you get to hear it again.

This time it's for a mock election that will be held for all students. Registration will be held during lunch periods in the commons today through Friday. Students will then be able to vote on Monday from 7:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. at a table by the office.

Principal Bill Hoff spoke highly of the upcoming event.

"It's really an excellent opportunity for all," Hoff said. "Students get to experience the political process and it helps increase interest for the students. It prepares all students for the future."

The mock student election is a nationwide effort coordinated by Northfield Mount Hermon High School in Massachusetts.

The mock elections have been held since 1988, and students have correctly picked all four presidential winners since that time.

To participate:

To participate in the school mock election, register at a table in the commons this week. The election is Monday. School ID is required to register and vote.

Students will be voting in the presidential, senate and house races as well as on issues such as health care and the war in Iraq.

Teacher Becky Kelley is in charge of the election at WHS.

To prepare for the voting and to learn how polls are conducted, AP Stats students are conducting a statistical sample today to try to estimate the outcome of the mock election at WHS.

Teacher Doyle Becker explained the process.

"Students are going from class to class, selecting random people to participate using the calculator," Becker said. "Our goal is to hit every class by seventh period using a variety of different surveys."

The surveys will include four different types of surveys—random sample, stratified sample by gender, stratified sample by grade level and stratified by employment status.

"Our goal is to figure out before the mock election is held what the outcome will be," Becker said.

Breakfast really is the most important meal

All of our lives we've been hearing that breakfast is the most important meal of the day.

Still, nearly one-fifth of adults don't eat breakfast in the morning. Many people complain that they don't have the time or that they don't see the advantage. It's scientific fact—people who eat breakfast in the morning work better and have a greater attention span, not to mention it helps you keep a healthy weight. Not only is breakfast the most important meal of the day, it is also the most delicious.

Think about it. Pancakes, French toast, cereal and eggs. What other meal is so versatile that you can eat it any time you want? You can have pancakes for dinner, but I doubt most people find a hot ham and cheese for breakfast appealing. At Hy-Vee they have a whole side of an aisle just dedicated to cereal alone. With so many options, how can you not be tempted to try them all?

Until a few years ago, I never saw the value of breakfast. I used to go until lunch without eating anything. Then one day I decided to start eating breakfast, and now I can't go through my day regularly without my one, two, or even three bowls of cereal every morning.

If you don't feel that breakfast is important, just ask any nutritionist. Grab a granola bar or some cereal on the way out the door if you don't think that you can wake up an extra 10 minutes in the morning to eat.

In addition to the nutritional value of eating breakfast, it also has, in my opinion, the best foods. Which is reason enough for me to take time for breakfast.

The nutritional value and all the great foods are just a very nice perk.

Junior Sara Hughes eats breakfast every day.
